SAILING TO WIN

"What was the matter with you fellows in the race?" asked the man at the clubhouse who made it his business to hold down the big armchair reserved for the rocking-chair fleet. The young man who and just jerked a big dinghy out of the water and landed it high up on the dock dropped wearily into the bow seat and looked

"Say, this yachting business isn't what it's cracked up to be, especially when you take everyone's advice," he declared, bitterly, "When I bought the Nancy all the wise fellows dropped around one at a time and in bunches and suggested that I'd better get Dudley to sail my bont for me the first season. They pointed out that I was new to the game and it wouldn't look well for me to lose all the big sliver cups, especially when I had a fast

"Well, I admit I was easy, I had never sailed a big boat before, and I didn't want to make any bad breaks. me come down and get everything ready for him-just so many reefs in the mainsall, all the big kites put in stops, so they would break out at the right time-and when he came aboard all he had to do was to make suggestions and kicks.

"Today we were to sail for the Johnson cup. It's a beauty and I wanted to take it out to Austin and show it to my landlubber friends. So I got Dudley to sail the boat for me. It was blowing pretty hard and we had in two reefs and the staysail. The way we tore down the harbor toward the line made me wish I was ashore, so Another reason for refraining from I could telephone to my friends that the cup was a cinch for my yacht. Before the starting gun was fired we nearly ran clear through another yacht that was tockeving near the line. I didn't like the way the boat was being sailed, but thought it was because I didn't understand the fine points of the game. I thought that perhaps the stunt was to disable as many of the boats in our class as possible-then it looked that way, for we luffed into another yacht and nearly lost our own bowsprit. When we crossed the line I could almost see that cup sitting on my dresser, for we were first and we kept first-in fact, we went so fast that

"So you won the race?" "Won nothing! When we got out to the four-mile crib, which was the first buoy we were to round, we passed it to port and went sailing north. Then we looked back to give the other fellows the happy smile, and what do you think! Every blamed boat went sailing it to starboard, and was off on the southern course. We had the balloon up and my expert sailor, instead of giving the boys up forward time to get it in, as I would have done, luffed. The next minute I saw myself paying out $25 for a new sail."

"Caught on the spreader?" "I should say it did-it ripped from head to foot. We all talked at once. the other boots went and Dudley finally admitted that he didn't really know what the race was-just kind of supposed that the course was the way we

Burns Manuscript Sold.

A Burns manuscript was the feature sale at a recent auction, for the bence up a fit of the Red Cross, held in Edinburgh. The manuscript "To the Unco Guld," set in a giazed case shows some were above the firmament; and it is in good preservation, and is an excellent specimen of the national poet's bold handwriting. Tacked on to it are hand-"Farewell old Colla's hills and dales, Her heathy moors and winding vales." Bidding for the manuscript opened at sixty guineas. Eventually, however, it was knocked down at 124 guineas. The manuscript was gifted by two ladies whose grandfather acquired it in 1824.
